

Behind Closed Doors: lack of transparency in ongoing permitted use of threatened wild animal species in China

October 2020

EIA research has revealed that, since 2018, China's National Forestry and Grassland Administration (NFGA) has continued to issue permits to buy, sell or utilise protected wild animal species or the products thereof to companies previously implicated in commercial trade in tiger bone wine, tiger skins, leopard bone and elephant skin. While the nature of activities covered by most of these recent permits cannot be definitively determined from publicly available information, previously documented activities of several recipient entities, combined with recent government confirmation that legal trade in big cat specimens continues,¹ suggest permitted activities may be cause for concern. EIA is urging the NFGA to release more comprehensive information on legal domestic trade in protected wild animal species as a matter of urgency.

Current systems which regulate commercial use of protected wild animal species are opaque, with insufficient information made available for stakeholders to assess the nature and scale of trade or the impacts on conservation of the species. In order to help stakeholders to assess legal trade in species such as tigers, leopards, elephants and rhinos, and seek more information on these transactions, EIA has collated, translated and made available public data on 531 government permits issued to companies or government entities to buy, sell or utilise key protected species, including 45 issued to pharmaceutical companies.

Revision of the Wildlife Protection Law is currently underway in China. Lawmakers therefore have an historic and timely opportunity to heed serious concerns about the impacts of legal markets on demand and illegal trade by amending the law to unambiguously prohibit commercial domestic trade in threatened wild animal species. By doing so now, the Chinese Government would be setting the stage for a successful meeting of the Conference of the Parties of the Convention on Biological Diversity, scheduled to be held in Kunming in 2021, with a positive example of significant policy change.

Background

As a country that is both home to a large proportion of the world's biodiversity and is a primary destination for many species subject to high levels of illegal harvesting and trafficking, the Chinese Government's policies on wildlife trade and the impact they have on demand for wildlife products are of global importance. The Wildlife Protection Law of the People's Republic of China (WPL)² is the country's most important piece of legislation covering conservation and trade of wild animal species. In its current incarnation, the WPL is serving to legitimise commercial exploitation of even highly threatened species. Legal domestic trade in species under special state protection such as leopards, pangolins, tigers, bears and saiga is possible due to provisions in Article 27 of the current law, which allows government agencies to issue permits for the sale, purchase or utilisation of such species or the products thereof where "necessary for scientific research, captive breeding, public exhibition or performances, heritage conservation or other special purposes". In practice, these provisions are interpreted so as to permit commercial trade for production of traditional Chinese medicine (TCM) products and ornamental items.

A revision of the WPL is underway in China at the time of writing, having been announced in February 2020 in the wake of widespread concern and discussion of the public health implications of trade in wild animals, in turn sparked by the emergence of COVID-19. This announcement was followed by the adoption of a set of 'Decisions' by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (NPC) – China's highest law-making body – which prohibited the commercial breeding and trade of almost all terrestrial wild animal species for consumption as food.³ This policy went beyond the existing WPL, which prohibits trade in species under special state protection for consumption as food, and as such was a significant move that indicated a newly precautionary approach to wildlife trade from at least part of Chinese officialdom. However, it did not go far enough, and commercial breeding and trade of even protected species for non-food purposes, such as production of TCM products or ornamental items, remain legal.

TCM products claiming to contain wild-sourced body parts of threatened, CITES Appendix I-listed species such as leopard bone and pangolin scales are sold legally in China, despite international trade bans. In 2020, EIA documented the companies and products involved in commercial domestic trade in leopard bone.⁴ While quantities and provenance of leopard bone in permitted trade have never been made public, the scale of this 'legal' trade, based on just one permit issued to one of the 24 companies apparently producing leopard bone products, is massive: 1.23 tonnes of leopard bone purchased in a single transaction.⁵ This company manufactures Hongmao Medicinal Wine, a mass-produced tonic wine offered for sale over the counter, and which lists leopard bone as an ingredient.⁶An image of this permit, Forestry Protection Permit 2018 No. 01237, was published online by Chinese investigative journalists.

Methodology and summary of findings

In attempting to verify the authenticity of Forestry Protection Permit 2018 No. 01237, EIA found an entry with the same permit number and company name on a searchable dataset⁷ on the website of the National Forestry and Grassland Administration (NFGA), a central government agency responsible for wildlife conservation, among other responsibilities, and the location of China's CITES Management Authority. This dataset appears to list permits of various categories issued by the NFGA, including those for export of protected wildlife or import/export of CITES-listed species,⁸ captive breeding of protected wild animals,⁹ construction in protected areas¹⁰ and the sale, purchase or utilisation of nationally protected terrestrial wild animal species.¹¹

With the example of Permit No. 01237 in mind, EIA looked deeper in this dataset and collated all published information on permits issued by the NFGA to “buy, sell or utilise terrestrial wildlife under first-class state protection or the products thereof” between January 2018 and August 2020 – 531 permits in total (provided in translation in Annex I). Some of these permits have been issued to companies that EIA and others have previously exposed as being involved in commercial use of tiger, leopard or elephant parts (see below for details).

The NFGA dataset provides the name of the company or entity that applied for the permit; an application code; date of application; decision made; date of decision; and a numerical code for the permitting decision. No information is provided as to the

⁹ Permit category “captive breeding permit for terrestrial wild animals under special state protection for which the State Council has designated the National Forestry and Grasslands Administration as the permitting body” (国务院规定由国家林草局审批的国家重点保护陆生野生动物人工繁育许可证核发)

¹¹ Permit category “approval to buy, sell or utilise terrestrial wildlife under first-class state protection or the products thereof” (出售、收购、利用国家一级保护陆生野生动物或其产品审批). Since July 2020, permits have been issued under the name “approval to buy, sell or utilise terrestrial wildlife under first-class state protection or the products thereof for which the State Council has designated the National Forestry and Grassland Administration as the approving body” (国务院规定由国家林草局审批的出售、购买、利用国家重点保护陆生野生动物及其制品审批) species covered by the permit or the body part or derivatives thereof; the quantities covered by the permit; or the reasons or uses for which the permit was issued.

EIA's analysis of the WPL and subsequent regulations indicate that these permits likely cover transactions relating to Giant Panda, Crested Ibis, Tiger, Leopards, Elephants, Golden Snub-nosed Monkey, Gibbons, Rhinos, Apes and Bustards. Article 27 of the WPL states that permits for sale, purchase or utilisation of wildlife under special state protection may be issued by provincial level government departments, with exceptions; a notification issued in 2017 (under its former name, the State Forestry Administration) designates the NFGA as the agency responsible for considering and issuing permits relating to these 10 taxa.¹²

While information in the dataset is limited, inferences can be made based on the names given as to the likely nature of some of the companies and entities receiving permits. For example, it may be inferred that:

- 208 permits were to zoos, parks or associated companies
- 109 permits were to circuses or animal performance companies
- 64 permits were to Giant Panda research centres
- 45 permits were to pharmaceutical companies
- 17 permits were to animal breeding or aquaculture companies or facilities
- 15 permits were to wildlife rescue centres
- 12 permits were to museums
- 8 permits were to local government offices
- 5 permits were to nature reserves
- 4 permits were to taxidermy companies
- 3 permits were to research facilities
- 2 permits were to ivory factories

Other recipients whose relationship to wildlife trade and use may be less clear based on their name appear to include companies related to tourism, biotechnology, aviation, trade and agricultural produce.

It is possible that these permits have been issued for non-commercial purposes or movement of live animals. However, cross-referencing names of certain recipient entities with other sources provides reason to suspect that dozens may relate to commercial trade in the body parts of species for which trade is a significant threat to wild populations. For such species, legal domestic trade, even from captive-bred specimens, serves to legitimise and perpetuate demand, in turn putting wild populations at risk. In the case of zoos, circuses and rescue centres, while it is likely transactions frequently relate to movement of wild animals, EIA has previously documented how such facilities in China have been permitted to sell skins of deceased tigers for processing into tiger skin rugs, and how that system is abused for illegal trade.¹³ Circuses have also been implicated as the source of tigers in illegal trade.¹⁴ Moreover, many zoos are commercial entities which offer little or no conservation value to wild populations.

As per draft regulations circulated in 2016 drawn up “for the purposes of regulating the commercial utilization of terrestrial wildlife under special state protection and the products thereof”,¹⁵ it is our understanding that processes allowing release of information following enquiries from third parties on permitted domestic trade are built into such mechanisms. While the status of these or subsequently adopted regulations are unclear, the 2016 document specifically stated, “Forestry departments shall keep and maintain information on wildlife and the products thereof, and information relating to special markings, and shall provide for convenient, efficient inquiries in accordance with the law.” However, when in 2019 EIA contacted the NFGA regarding permits issued to an ivory carving factory and pharmaceutical companies which appeared to be manufacturing and selling TCM products claiming to contain leopard bone, this was met with a refusal to provide additional information.

Heilongjiang Siberian Tiger Forest Park Taishan Scenic Area Siberian Tiger Park (黑龙江东北虎林园台山景区东北虎园)

- Received one permit in 2018
- The Siberian Tiger Forest Park is one of China's largest captive tiger facilities, and has been documented selling bone wine labelled in Latin as containing lion bone, but marketed as having been made using tiger bone.²⁰ This facility has been reported to have a large stockpile of tiger carcasses in storage. In addition, EIA investigations in 2012 documented tiger traders who stated that the State Forestry Administration issued a notification in 2005 legalising the sale of captive-bred tiger bone sourced from captive tiger facilities with more than 500 tigers to designated medicinal manufacturers authorised to supply hospitals, and that since the Harbin Siberian Tiger Park had more than 500 tigers, the facility was permitted to produce "bone strengthening wine" under this government scheme²¹

- In 2007, EIA investigations found advertisements for tiger bone wine for sale online which stated the tiger bones came from this facility.²⁴ In 2012, EIA investigators found a taxidermy workshop at this facility with a pile of skins including leopard and tiger skins; employees claimed they had sold five tiger skins as decorative rugs to private individuals in the first half of 2012.²⁵ A brochure for the taxidermy workshop handed to EIA investigators in 2012 promotes the decorative and collectible value of their taxidermy specimens

Beijing Longfuteng Fauna and Flora Co. Ltd (北京龙富藤动植物有限责任公司)

- Received three permits in 2018-19
- In 2012, the owner of this company claimed he was a co-founder of the State-founded Hengdaohezi Felidae Breeding Centre, China's first tiger farm, before going into private business importing and exporting wildlife. He had samples of "bone strengthening wine" produced by wineries associated with the Xionsen Bear and Tiger Village and the Harbin Siberian Tiger Forest Park. He insisted it was made using tiger bones but, because of a 1993 State Council order banning use of tiger bone, the wineries are unable to say so on the ingredients. He stated his goal was to raise 500 tigers and referenced a "secret" notification No. 139, circulated in 2005, regarding the sale of captive-bred tiger bone to designated medicinal manufacturers authorised to supply hospitals with tiger bone wine, which stipulated that only operations with 500 tigers or more could apply for permission

Recommendations

With the WPL revision process ongoing, lawmakers in China have a timely opportunity to revise Article 27 and other relevant language to ban the commercial breeding and trade for any commercial purposes of wild animal species that are threatened by trade, including captive-bred specimens. Moreover as the host of the 15th Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity in 2021, the global community is looking to China to set the stage for the transformative change in policy and political will that is needed to avert global biodiversity collapse. Yet only when the Government commits to reducing demand for threatened wildlife, underpinned by unambiguous prohibitions on commercial use of products such as tiger skins, pangolin scales and leopard bone, can China begin to take up a mantle as a genuine leader in conservation.

China's State Council or Ministry of Natural Resources should instruct the NFGA to:

- Release more information on permits issued to buy, sell or utilise protected wild animals species or the products thereof, including species, body parts or derivatives, source and quantity covered, and the purposes and uses covered by the permits
- Cease issuing permits for commercial use of protected species, including for medicinal or ornamental purposes and including captive-bred specimens

China's National People Congress and relevant committees should:

³⁸ EIA in litt. 2020

- Revise Article 27 and other relevant language in the Wildlife Protection Law so as to unambiguously prohibit commercial breeding and trade for any purpose of tigers, leopards, pangolins, elephants, rhinos, bears and other wild animal species that are threatened by trade³⁹

The CITES Secretariat and CITES Parties should:

- Request further information from the NFGA on these and other permits issued to trade in CITES-listed species, particularly those issued to entities previously documented as engaging in commercial use of these species
- Urge the Chinese Government to fully implement recommendations in CITES Res. Conf. 12.5 by closing domestic markets for Asian big cats and their parts and derivatives, and eliminating use in traditional medicine

Companies and entities that have received permits should:

- Publish details of permits received, including species, quantities, products, source and purposes covered
- Commit to ending commercial use of wild animal species that are threatened by trade or the products thereof, if they had been engaged in such activities
